Attention College Students:
Due to recent changes, many more students in Indiana may now be eligible for SNAP!

Are you a student looking to stretch your food budget? SNAP may be able to help, thanks to new rules. SNAP provides monthly benefits on a debit-like card that you can use to purchase groceries. You may be eligible for food assistance benefits during COVID. Students with spouses or children may be eligible for more benefits.

Students between the ages of 18 and 49, who are enrolled at least half-time in higher education and meet all other SNAP requirements, may be eligible for food assistance benefits if they meet ONE of the following student-specific criteria:

- Are ELIGIBLE to participate in a state or federally-funded work study program (even if not currently participating)
- Have an expected Family Contribution (EFC) of $0 (based on the FAFSA-Free Application for Federal Student Aid)
- Are enrolled in a Perkins Postsecondary Career and Technical Education (CTE) Program
- Are employed or self-employed for at least an average of 20 hours per week
- Participate in an on-the-job training program
- Have a documented physical or mental disability
- Care for a child under age 6 (or under age 11 if no adequate childcare is available)
- Are a single parent taking care of a child under age 12 and enrolled full-time in college
